

-friendly Miami restaurants

RODRIGO MORENO

MARTIN-DM Getty Images

Mother and daughter eating lunch in a restaurant.

you'll wonder why you need to ever go anywhere else again beside your kitchen. The cuisine? Who cares about the cuisine? Did you just read that Glass and Vine has a PLAYGROUND? Seriously though, the menu is headed up by celeb chef Giorgio Ropicavoli, so yeah, it's no joke.

Details: Glass and Vine, 2820 McFarlane Rd., Coconut Grove, 305-200-5268; glassandvine.com

CREAM PARLOUR

This narrow, quaint hideaway in the middle of a bustling area of Biscayne Boulevard will make you feel like you've been invited into Grandma's tea-room. The bakery/cafe's well-worn furniture, mismatched plates and kitschy decor add to the undeniable charm. Kids will appreciate the comfort food (can't go wrong with gooey grilled cheese) as well as homemade desserts that are — warning! — set out in a distracting display case. The Cream folks get bonus points for keeping up the outdoor area out back and supplying board games galore.

Details: Cream Parlour, 8224 Biscayne Blvd.; 786-534-4180; creamparlor.com candy), a patio with adjacent park and, if you're lucky, a mariachi band bringing the party.

Details: Cantina La Veinte, 495 Brickell Ave, Miami, www.cantina20.com; 786-623-6135

GLASS AND VINE

Pro tip: Wait until the weather gets a tad cooler and less stormy, then make a B line here. Once you discover the wonders of a restaurant literally located inside a park on the bay with a playground,

Miami

Glass & Vine in Coconut Grove

Cream Parlour on Biscayne Boulevard

RAWPIXEL Getty Images/Stockphoto